

ENRA, a contemporary troupe from Japan which has wowed global audiences with its one-of-a-kind performances, will be performing at Samarpana – Asian Festival of Classical Dance this year.

The troupe is known for its fusion of images and many genres of art to create a magical experience.

The group says: “We wanted to challenge different ways of expression and create a more complex work with a different outlook on the world.”

Enra will be performing live on Sept 6.

The images it will use in the presentation are not limited to graphics, but extends to writing and interactive staging.

The performers of Enra come from various backgrounds such as ballet, rhythmic gymnastics and animation dance. They will be performing pieces like Pleieades, Primitive, Torque Starter and Fuma Kai, directed by Nobuyuki Hanabusa.
